

Lavendrose

Lavendrose

Lavender Products

www.lavendrose.com

To harvest lavender, use sharp bypass pruners and gather a small handful of long flower stems. Be sure that you are leaving behind at least two sets of leaves on the green part of the stem. If you cut all the way back to the woody part of the stem, that stem will not regrow.

I like to be generous and leave at least 3-4 sets of leaves on the plant, then go back and prune it to two sets of leaves on the green stem. This ensures that I'm not damaging the plant that gives me all these beautiful flowers! Continue collecting stems in your hand until you have a nice sized bundle. Secure the bundle with twine and continue until the plant is fully harvested. Pruning the plants like this will keep the shrub tidy and evergreen through some colder climates. If your plants are leggy and you see lots of dead wood, it's a good idea to summer prune them each year until they regain a tidier shape. You can safely prune lavender plants twice in the growing season to help define and maintain their shape.

Lavendrose

Like many harvests, lavender harvest is a timely event. Not only does it revolve around the rhythm of lavender blooms, but it also depends on daylight, temperature and rain.

Lavender harvest is a special time of year at the farm in that, as the weather starts to heat up, the pace picks up, too.

There's a buzz, and it's not only coming from the bees (who LOVE buzzing from sprig to sprig, collecting nectar from blooming lavender buds). There's a buzz coming from every which way – from busy farm workers to excited lavender enthusiasts visiting the farm during one of the most beautiful times of the year.

We rise bright and early to greet our lavender fields as soon as it's light outside. Once it's light enough to see, the clock starts ticking – Come late morning, around 10am, it's too hot to harvest, and we have to wait until the next day to pick up where we left off.

Dry lavender bunches by hanging them in a warm, dry spot, out of direct sunlight. Under eaves, in the garage, or somewhere in the garden that is protected is ideal.

I have also dried lavender along a shady fence and made it into a dried lavender wreath. Adding some drying lavender around your home will make it smell heavenly. I highly recommend it.

If we wait for all the flowers to open, little oil remains in the lavender.

Harvesting lavender in a timely manner is essential to cultivating high quality lavender products that keep their aroma and medicinal content for a long time.

With the birds and the bees rising early alongside us, looking out at the Ali and the Huseyin Mustafa as we harvest bundles of lavender, it's a special time of year, indeed.

At the same time, we have a social responsibility project.

lavender village belongs to our women, lavender bunches; We are able to purchase with contract production.

Lavender bunches were sent to Russia, Germany and America. Now it's in England.

Bouquets of lavender, wrapped in kraft paper; According to your request; Elips kraft label is prepared according to your brand's logo and 4 cm x 2 cm label.

Lavender bouquets; placed in carton box and sent to you.

If you want, in bouquets; we can use purple jute cloth instead of kraft paper.
Or if you like, lavender bouquets; natural jute diapers

At the same time, we have a social responsibility project.

lavender village belongs to our women, lavender bunches; We are able to purchase with contract production.

Lavender bunches were sent to Russia, Germany and America. Now it's in England.

50 gr

175 gr

